

Blue, Blue, My Pills Are Blue

The Doctor said that everything looked okay but he wanted me to take one of these pills every day and he put some small blue pills on the table.

I said, "Hey Doc, it's my heart that's not functioning so well, not any other muscle".

He asked, "What do you mean?"

I asked him why he was giving me Viagra.

He told me that the pills were not Viagra, they were baby aspirins that just happened to be blue and I should take one a day.

This event reminded me of a magazine ad that I read advertising Viagra and it had a warning at the bottom of the page. The warning said:

"If you have an erection that lasts longer than 4 hours tell your Doctor".

Geez! If I had an erection that lasted longer than 4 hours I'd tell everybody.

Now, in the mornings, before I take my little blue aspirin,
I check to see if Judy has made a switch.
